The song

The first melodies and lyrics of Faux Sourires were written more than five years ago. It was the first song Jasper wrote partly in French. That is a big part of why it has always stayed close to him, and why he only wanted to release it once it felt completely right musically.

The song is about the routine of everyday life and how you can lose sight of what you actually want. About other people's expectations, the choices you make and daring to go your own way. The chorus sums up that routine in one line: 'Métro, boulot, bistrot et puis au lit' (commute, work, bar, bed).

This year Faux Sourires found its final shape, built on what first drew Jasper to music: his guitar, piano and voice. Dutch and French, the two languages he uses every day, come together in it organically and complement each other.

Biography

Jasper Publie started performing as a child. From the age of ten to twenty-one he was the singer of Belgian pop-rock band Bandits, who signed to Universal and later to PIAS. He went on to study pop music at the conservatoire and worked on his own electropop project.

In 2024 he took part in The Voice Belgique, the French-language Belgian edition of the show, in Mentissa's team, where he rediscovered how much he enjoys singing in French.

As Publie Jasper, he now releases his own songs. Faux Sourires is the project's first single.
